SINEAD BOVELL

Futurist | Strategic Foresight Advisor

Sinead Bovell is a futurist and strategic foresight advisor working at the intersection of emerging technologies and business strategy. Her work focuses on how technological shifts propagate through economic systems, reshape business models, and introduce new constraints and advantages for governments, companies, and societies over time.

She advises executive leadership across global enterprises on anticipating inflection points and structural changes, helping organizations understand where value is likely to migrate, how existing models may break down, and which long-term forces matter most in an increasingly complex innovation landscape. Her foresight work spans technologies from artificial intelligence to synthetic biology, with a particular focus on how these domains converge and interact with broader forces such as geopolitics, demographics, and institutional change.

A regular tech contributor for CNN, NBC, and CTV, and often a featured expert on a myriad of talk and morning shows, Sinead has also served as a tech contributor for publications such as Vogue, The Star, and The Globe and Mail, and was named one of the top 50 voices shaping the future by Afrotech. Sinead's podcast, I've Got Questions is dedicated to making sense of how AI and other emerging technologies are reshaping our lives and our world.

Sinead is a 14-time speaker at the United Nations and has delivered formal addresses to presidents, royalty, and Fortune 500 leaders.
